I. INTRODUCTION

This manual was originally developed by Past Governor Elaine Swanson (2006-2008) to help Club leaders fulfill their responsibility of their position as effectively, efficiently and painlessly as possible. It was revised by Past Governor Amy Grubbe (2008-2010) and then by Carol Jenkins, District Secretary (2012-2014). This manual does not replace the Zonta International (ZI) Club Manual but provides guidelines for helping leaders function and be successful. It can be used as part of a board or committee chair orientation and made available to members who are considering a board or committee chair position.

Other resources that a Zonta Club should have readily available for its Presidents and other leaders include:

- The Zonta International Club Manual which can be downloaded from the Zonta International Website - the Zonta International Club Manual will provide you with the information about what ZI requires.
- Zonta International Bylaws (ZI Website) and the Club Bylaws - All actions taken by the Club must comply with the Club and ZI Bylaws.
- The Club Strategic Plan - The Strategic Plan will identify the goals that the Club plans to carry out in the next few years.

Don’t forget to take advantage of the past presidents in your club if you have questions. In addition, some of the best resources are the District Board especially the Area Director. The District Officers and Directors are experienced, caring Zontians who want to help you and your Club function as effectively as possible. Contact Information is available through the District Leadership Guide.

A great Zonta Club should have the following characteristics:

- The President is capable, committed and enthusiastic
- The members “catch” the enthusiasm and pass it on
- Officers and Committee Chairs serve willingly
- Business meetings are run efficiently
- Service projects combine the giving of both time and money and meeting the objectives of Zonta International
- Fundraisers require the participation of everyone
- Meetings are set for the same time each month
- Guest speakers are worth taking the time to hear
- The Club budget contains money for delegates to attend area meetings, conferences and conventions and it is used
- The Club budget contains money for the operating expenses of the club including postage, copying, and Zonta supplies
- Zonta’s mission, goals and objectives come first, followed closely by fellowship
Setting the Stage for Success

Congratulations on the election or appointment to a leadership position in the Club! Now is the time to prepare for your term. Obtain the printed resources listed above and read them carefully. Utilize the information that is pertinent to your position. Make an assessment of the Club’s accomplishments and compare your findings with the Strategic Plan. Get to know the Club members and their interests. How do their interests fit with the work you want to accomplish? The President-to-be will want to identify those whom would be good candidates for Committee chairs. Passion for the committee work, good leadership skills, communication skills, ability to delegate and experience are all good characteristics for Committee Chairs to have.

It is highly recommend you have a Board and Committee Chair orientation so that everyone knows the goals for the biennium and what is expected of each Board member and Committee chair. Some pages of this manual will provide good handouts for newly elected and appointed leaders.

II. LEADERSHIP

Talents of Successful Leaders

Leaders maintain organizations. Although leadership functions within a group, it begins with an individual. Every Zontian is a leader since every member helps maintain solidarity and cohesiveness.

Successful leaders do the following:

• Concern themselves with the optimum development of each member
• Encourage others to participate, whether by chairing a committee, mentoring a new member, organizing a project, or being a good committee member
• Welcome new members and participate in their orientation
• Create a friendly atmosphere
• Offer reassurance
• Know their own strengths and weaknesses;
• Recognize and rely on those who are strong in areas where the leader is weak
• Know what resources are available to them
• Allow themselves to grow to learn the job
• Listen to what others say
• Keep an open mind
• Wait until they have all the facts before judging the issue
• Are readily accessible
• Stimulate members’ interest in accepting higher office
• Prepare themselves to accomplish the task at hand
• Do not allow jobs to accumulate or languish
• Caution against wasted effort on irrelevant projects
• Focus on projects and programs that advance Zonta’s goals
• Clarify the situation where confusion arises
• Delegate appropriately
• Gives clear directions
• Follows up to ensure the tasks are accomplished
• Recognize others’ accomplishments and successes
• Train their successors

In addition, leaders have many talents. Ten are listed below:

1. Chaos Embracer
   Effective leadership requires embracing chaos created by others and creating chaos of your own that is likely to stimulate breakthroughs in creativity and innovation. This implies introducing change long before it is required to outside forces. Instead of establishing isolated change efforts or programs, Clubs need to view change as an organizational constant, evolving and mutating into new forms across time but ever present.

   Boards must create policies to provide order to the chaos, shaping and influencing the efforts of staff and volunteers. The goal is not to promulgate binders of procedures but to create and articulate those core policies and practices that will provide valued guidance as the daily chaos is managed by those in the best position to do so.

   Leaders create useful chaos when they:
   • Break traditional yet arbitrary boundaries that have limited club efforts;
   • Set high goals that other will find compelling to attain even though doing so will be difficult and
   • Institutionalize forgetfulness by helping unlearn lessons from the past that may be needlessly inhibiting new approaches or new thinking.

2. Wow! Injector
   Does your Club have Wow! Opportunities and Projects? Wow! Projects are ones that add value, matter, make a difference and leave a legacy. When people are involved in this type of project or experience, they feel rejuvenated, connected to others and are personally challenged. They have a great time learning and working together. After the project ends, you can bet there will be a large sign-up list for the new Wow! opportunity. Wow! projects and programs help answer the value and return on investment question being asked by members. Loyalty is derived from the quality of each and every interaction. Organizations offering Wow! opportunities are more likely to engender greater loyalty.

3. Facilitator
   Facilitation encompasses all the acts that help individuals and clubs take responsibility for their efforts, growth and achievements. Facilitation includes behaviors such as making connections and bridging experiences; focusing the group on essentials; asking the obvious and even unaskable questions; clarifying roles, responsibilities and expectations; providing closure around decisions or results; and releasing potential and support progress. Facilitative leaders help build the capacity of individuals and clubs to do for themselves that which previously has been done for them or to them.
4. Partner and Collaborator
Club leaders at all levels must become adept partners and collaborators with both internal and external stakeholders. Club efforts are likely to be best served when board, committees and task forces work in partnership. This is a significant change from the more traditional model in which committees recommend, boards decide and committees implement.

Being an effective partner and collaborator requires a set of skills that may differ somewhat from those traditionally sought for club leadership positions. Partners and collaborators need to be strong listeners, not only advocates; communication conduits, not only spokespersons; boundary breakers, not only turf protectors; possibility thinkers, not only probability describers; and honest negotiators, not only tough dealers.

5. Talent Scout and Developer
Today’s club leaders must be talent scouts, 24-7-365. It is not only what you know or who you know. Value today is derived from what you know about who you know and what you do with that knowledge. Leaders need to be walking Yellow Pages able to call upon talents as needed to serve Zonta’s goals and projects.

Twenty first century organizations will move beyond measuring return on investments and returns on assets and will begin to measure return on talents. Gaining a return on talents requires not only recruiting the right mix, but also on developing the talents of all members. Club leaders must champion growth and development opportunities for members in an effort to expand individual’s talent portfolio.

6. Futurist
The goal is not to speculate on what might happen but to imagine what you can actually make happen. All Club leaders must become part-time futurists, regularly scanning the environment to identify trends on the immediate and long-term horizons that might have implications for the Club and its members. Futuristic leaders will develop board and committee meeting agendas that include strategic discussions, not only traditional reports and reviews.

Futurists understand that the future is not something that just happens to us; we are active participants in creating the future. Futurists are willing to use scenario planning and other futuring techniques that explore what might happen as opposed to looking at quantitative data that prescribe what is likely to happen. Club leaders must become comfortable thinking farther into the future than members might immediately value, while still providing programs and services that address current needs.

7. Values Champion
The essence of being a leader is to make sure the organization knows itself. The club leader is a champion of the Club’s core values, ensuring their preservation as the organization moves more and more rapidly in an ever-changing environment. The Club leader as values champion helps anchor individuals’ and committees’ efforts in the organization’s core values. In addition, the leader is able to help others distinguish between forms and function as they relate to organizational efforts. (Governance is the function; a board is the form.) A values champion emphasizes the core value and the function, but is willing to try new forms that meet contemporary needs.

8. Clarity Creator
When committee or board efforts or projects lack clear focus or direction, they immediately appear less attractive. In these cases, volunteers have little interest in going through the motions of volunteer service if they don’t view it as leading to a meaningful outcome and contribution. Club leaders need to be vigilant communicators; sending messages that help bring clarity and order to the inevitable chaos that will be associated with the Club’s efforts. Having a handful of core messages or talking points and then repeating them consistently can help shape individual efforts on behalf of the club.

Beyond effectively communicating, club leaders can help create clarity by constantly focusing conversations and attention on only those questions and issues that matter most. This means refusing to engage in minutia management that is better left to those more closely associated with the work. It means remaining focused on a longer term strategic agenda rather than this year’s plan of work.

9. Passionate Player
Clubs depend on the passions of members to pursue the organization’s mission and vision. Club leaders need to be passionate about their role and contributions to the club as well as interested in learning about the passions that others possess. Upon doing so, they can more effectively match an individual’s passion with appropriate projects and leadership positions within the club. Individual passion and emotional commitment will almost always win out over rational decision making.

Club leaders understand that tapping into “heart power” is critical, particularly when working with their volunteer peers. They are constantly seeking ways the club can more effectively link individual passion to organizational efforts, as well as tearing down club practices and procedures that needlessly inhibit the power of individual passions being leveraged.

10. Storyteller
Storytelling is back and in a big way. Long recognized by non-western cultures for its social and cultural benefit in transmitting values and rituals from one generation to another, storytelling is being recognized for its power to do the same thing in clubs. Storytelling is how human beings relate to each other. Not through business plans. The more senior you are, the more you learn through storytelling. Club leaders who can effectively tell stories are able to help others learn the lore of the Club, as well as shape their beliefs, values and behaviors. Stories and metaphors are known to enhance individual retention and learning, an important goal for any club leader hoping to break through the noise and information overload most everyone experiences almost daily.
Delegation
The ability to delegate successfully is crucial for leaders. No one can carry out all the goals and functions of the Club by herself. Even if you could, that does not give members a sense of being needed or belonging. Delegation is necessary to accomplish the Club’s goals. However, for many of us delegating is difficult to do. Here are some helpful hints on being successful in delegating:

• Determine the importance of what you are delegating, the order in which it is to be accomplished and convey that information to the member(s) to whom you are delegating
• Make sure the member(s) understands the purpose of the task and how it fits into the larger picture of Zonta
• Match the job to be done with the interests and skills of the member(s)
• Spread the work among as many members as possible
• If the project is large, divide the tasks up i.e. public relations, gathering materials, decorations, etc.
• Ask the member(s) to get other members to assist them
• Provide the requisite authority, information and training to do the task
• Establish realistic deadlines for interim tasks and for completion
• Remember that the member(s) will not do the task in exactly the same manner you would accomplish it
• Follow up with the member(s) to provide assistance as needed, monitor progress and establish a mechanism for feedback
• Avoid micromanaging and be willing to accept different ideas to get the job done
• Be willing to replace the member if the project stalls because of lack of attention to it or identify another member who could step in to help move the project along.
• Acknowledge and appreciate the member’s accomplishments

III. MEETINGS
Purpose
Zonta Clubs have membership meetings, board meetings, and committee meetings. Membership meetings are the largest meeting that the President will conduct. At this meeting it is important to use Robert’s Rules of Order to maintain control of the agenda and allow for discussion. Board meetings and Committee meetings are smaller and can be more informal. Still using parliamentary procedures will help to assure that business decisions are made and recorded appropriately. Whatever the meeting the purpose should be made clear. This can be done by notifying members in advance of what action needs to be taken.
Conducting a meeting

When conducting a meeting there are three important things to consider; preparation, facilitation and follow-up.

Preparation
1. Define outcomes. What is the meeting intending to accomplish?
2. Write an agenda. Start with an item that will unify the group.
3. Invite the right people. Are there other members besides the board or committee that could be helpful? Would it be helpful to bring an outside expert to the membership meeting?
4. Anticipate questions and objections. Prepare background information that responds to the logical questions a participant might have. Make it clear that members are expected to read the materials and be prepared for the discussion and decision. Ask members with questions to let you know ahead of time so that you or others can be prepared to answer them.

Facilitation
1. Start and end on time
2. Balance participation. See that everyone participates and no one dominates.
3. Close on an upbeat note.

Follow-up
1. Distribute accurate minutes to the participants
2. Evaluate the results of the meeting

Some Basic Rules of Successful Meetings

- Have an agenda and follow it
- If the meeting is not a regularly scheduled one, pick a time and place that will be convenient for as many participants as possible
- If you have more than forty members in the room, use a microphone. Also use a microphone if one of the speakers has a soft voice, the room is large and the acoustics are poor, the speaker will be using special vocal effects such as whispering or dialects, a stage presence will add to the impact of the presentation, or some members have diminished hearing.
- When appropriate, particularly at Board or committee meetings, sum up at the end of the meeting what the members have decided to do and who will carry out the tasks.
- Use media to enhance meetings and provide information, use power point instead of paper unless the information is needed for another purpose at a later time
- Follow appropriate parliamentary procedure
- Keep members focused on the topic at hand; avoid having a room full of side comments where no one can hear the topic being discussed
- Avoid these common problems:
  - Lack of involvement in planning by the members, make sure they feel ownership
  - Too much sameness, maintain a balance between stability and a fresh approach
- Non-functioning equipment: have extra bulbs and cords, even a contingency plan if nothing works or a speaker doesn’t show
- Inappropriate seating, arrange seating according to the formality of the meeting and the need for participants to spread out materials
- Overly long presentations; be sure to give speakers a time limit

Organizing an Agenda
The importance of an agenda cannot be overstated as it sets all the parameters for the meeting; advises participants of the meeting’s purpose which is critical to a successful meeting; provides a checklist to ensure all necessary business is covered; and ensures that you follow appropriate protocol and accomplish what you set out to do. Before the agenda is finalized, ask other meeting participants in advance if they have any items they would like to add and distribute the agenda in advance.

To organize the agenda consider the following:

1. Must-do’s first. The must-do’s are the actions that every board has accountability for, such as approving previous minutes and receiving reports from the treasurer.
2. Use a consent agenda. A consent agenda contains items a board member needs to receive and review but not necessarily discuss. Consent agenda items can be moved to the discussion if a motion is made to do so.
3. Discussion and decision items should be next. Matters that fall under discussion and decision usually include things a board must take a position on. Examples include changes in bylaws, budgets, activities from committees that require approval. Tackle the most important, the most difficult or the most controversial first so that board or committee members are fresh and ready to make decisions. Be sure that background materials have been sent ahead of time with plenty of time for review.
4. Make time for future planning. At one third of the time at each meeting the board or committee should think and plan for the future. The use of specific agenda items related to the future is one way for a board to identify trends, consider the implications of a needs assessment or brainstorm assumptions about the future from a political, economic, technological or socio-demographic perspective. Allowing time for reflection with these future-focused items gives the board or committee members a sense of control and a sense that they are playing offense rather than defense.
5. Make a summary or outline the next steps. At the end of each meeting, take a few minutes to review what has been accomplished during the meeting and be sure that all members know how action will be followed up—who will do what and by when. This is also a good time to review what will be said publicly about a particularly difficult or highly charged issue, ensuring that all members carry the same message from the meeting.
Facilitating Decision-Making

1. Stick to the agenda—agreement on an agenda also assists in stimulating development of group norms. Concentration on orderly procedure in one dimension will suggest other kinds of agreement that may be made informally.

2. Control the traffic of the group—a leader sets the tone of the meeting and its tempo, and like an impresario, she facilitates the work of the group. It is up to her to balance the discussion and to make sure that no single point of view predominates.

3. Resolve conflicts—sometimes disagreements can get out of hand and be interpreted as dislikes. When this happens, it is up to the chairman or other member of the group to defuse the situation.

4. Keep a record of what the group has done and what remains to be done—serve as the group’s guide to make transitions from one agenda item to another and to review what has been decided in previous steps. The leader’s summary will permit members to raise questions and challenge agreements they do not feel are real. A summary will permit the group to understand what is resolved, so that it does not need to take time to go over resolved issues.

Minutes

Minutes of a meeting should be concise and clear. They should cover the following:

- A heading that includes the name of the club, type of meeting and the date
- Names of the meeting participants
- Brief summary of the agenda item and action taken
- Names of those responsible for carrying the action and deadline for completion
- Decisions should include the motion made and by whom, the seconder of the motion and the fact that the motion passed or failed.
- If reports are presented in writing the report may be incorporated in the minutes; if not, the report should be summarized
- The minutes should not be a verbatim of the meeting, nor should extraneous comments be included.

It is important to ensure that minutes are distributed within a suitable timeframe after the meeting and in advance of the next meeting so that reading the minutes will not take meeting time and the minutes can be used to reinforce assignments and as follow-up at the next meeting. A template for minutes is included in the resources.

Follow-up

It is important that no action item is lost and that action decided upon is completed. Below is a suggestion for making your follow-up foolproof. It can be adapted for Board or Committee work.

Create an action chart. It is a detailed compilation of all actions generated from the meeting, along with the expected completion/next report date, the person or committee responsible, the status and the date completed, each listed in columns. As background, the chart should also catalog the name of the committee, where and when the committee met and who served as chair. Put the action chart to use by:
- Making it official—be certain to fill out the action chart as soon as the minutes are drafted and file it with the official minutes after they are approved. Send a copy of the minutes to each member of the committee. This should occur within two weeks of the date of the meeting.

- Making it easy—include on the form a column for the name of the person responsible. On the copy going to the individual responsible for the action, highlight the name to make it stand out.

- Making it systematic—put a copy in your tickler file and check it methodically. Keep the form’s status column up to date. This can be done every few weeks in pencil until all actions are complete. Then a permanent copy can be made for the files. Checking status at regular intervals keep you from being surprised by forgotten deadlines.

- Making it specific—the committee should determine an expected completion/new report date for each action, which is listed on the chart. A nebulous wish list is likely to remain just that. A straightforward due date gives committee members a defined target and a follow-up calendar. Ideally, no one will misunderstand who is responsible for what and when it is due. When everyone is clear on expectations, they are more confident about follow-up and more likely to produce. They are also far less likely to resent reminders.

- Making it a priority—it is the chair’s job to make it clear to members that an assignment is a commitment. Set aside time at the beginning of the meeting to briefly review the actions and outcomes from the previous meeting. On those actions not yet finished, the person responsible should be prepared to report on the status and the expected completion date. Obviously the goal of this exercise is not to embarrass anyone, and clearly some assignments will require longer timetables.

- Making it official—once all actions on the chart have a completed date, put the final copy in the official minutes. This becomes an easy reference resource when completing the report on committee or board actions at the end of the term of office.

IV. COMMUNICATION

The success of the club depends on how well the President, Board members, committees and members can communicate with each other. The purpose of the organization and its goals must be conveyed in a clear and concise manner to all members. Decisions made and the subsequent actions to be taken must be related clearly. No one should feel that they “are out of the loop.” Knowing some principles of communication, the roadblocks that can cause communication to fails and ways of overcoming roadblocks will help Boards and Committees to succeed.
Principles of Good Communication

- Objective Have an end result or objective clearly in mind before communicating. Examine the purpose for the communication. What specifically should the receiver of the communication understand or do, as a result of the communication?

- Method What is the best method of achieving the objective? Weigh the alternatives—written or oral, group or individual, formal or informal—before selecting a specific method such as a letter, memo, meeting, telephone call, etc.

- Structure How the communication is organized and constructed is very important to its success. How much or how little to cover: What is the best way to organize the message? How to keep it simple and concise, yet complete? How to gear it to the audience’s needs or frame of reference?

- Feedback Encourage frequent responses in order to insure that the message has been understood and to evaluate how the receiver of the communications feels about it.

Roadblocks to Communication

- Prejudice—defined as a judgment or opinion held in disregard of facts that contradict it; a judgment or opinion formed before the facts are known.

- Semantic differences—different meanings in language around feelings, assumptions, viewpoints and attitudes.

- Lack of self-confidence

- Speaking over the head of the listener—keep it super simple

- Understanding but not accepting what is said—“I know you think you heard what I said but I’m not sure that what you understood is what I meant.”

- Hearing but not listening—we listen at 500-600 words per minute while we can only talk at approximately 150 words per minute.

- Lack of trust—People don’t believe they will get a fair hearing to begin with

- Non-verbal—body language saying something different than what is being said verbally

Overcoming Roadblocks

- Use empathy—the projection of one’s own personality into the personality of another in order to understand him better; the ability to share in another’s emotions or feelings

- Realistically understand the other person’s differences—what kind of state is the other person in? What kind of background do they have?

- Use words that are understood by all—keep it simple

- Speak clearly and maintain eye contact—don’t slur or mumble words—speak loud enough for all to hear

- Be aware of non-verbal signals—body language and what it is saying to you

- Refuse to let distractions interrupt attention from the other person—concentrate on the person speaking and what they are saying

- Analyze and evaluate the tone of voice—How are they saying this: What does it mean? How am I saying this? What do I mean?
Start listening when the other person starts talking—immediate listening is the only way to be able to judge what is being said

Knowing the participants
Most of us don’t think about the way we think, yet the evidence is impressive that different people really do think about things in different ways. Because of the traits we inherited and the early experiences we have, each of us begins to develop particular methods and approaches to identify the world around us, make sense of it and begin to apply what we know to setting goals and solving problems. We pay attention to different aspects of reality, gather different data, order those data differently, draw different conclusions, make quite different decisions, and then proceed to implement those decisions in very different ways. Whether we know it or not, most of us have a strong preference for a limited set of think strategies. While some of us have learned to adapt to different thinking styles depending on the situation, we all think that our way of thinking is the best way. If we are successful in our thinking, that reinforces our thinking style but if we fail, we tend to blame others for not thinking like us. Seldom do we take the trouble to learn how others think. If we did so we would expand our adaptability and other competence in dealing with problem situations and other events in daily life. If we had insight into the way others think, we might connect with them in more meaningful and productive ways. Different ways of thinking accounts for much personal and organizational conflict over direction to be taken, goals to achieve, and the means to achieve them.

InQ has developed a set of questions that measures how people think. The five thinking styles are identified below:

- Synthesists, who focus their thinking on ideas and find connections among things that other people see as having little or no relationship -- their style is challenging, speculative, integrative, and process-oriented;
- Idealists, who experience reality as the whole into which new data are assimilated, based on perceived similarities to things they already know -- their style is assimilative, receptive, and need-oriented;
- Pragmatists, who perceive a world constantly changing and largely unpredictable, requiring a flexible, whatever-works approach to problem-solving -- their style is adaptive, incremental, and payoff-oriented;
- Analysts, who see the world as structured, organized, and predictable, who believe there should be one best method for doing anything -- their style is prescriptive and method-oriented; and
- Realists, who are inductive, whose mental modes are derived chiefly from observation and their own experiences -- their style is empirical and task-oriented.

To have a balanced board there should be some of every type of thinking style among board members. Having too much of one type can make the board ineffective. For more information about thinking styles, you can go to www.thinkingstyleprofiles.com. This is just one example of the many tools available that you can use to determine the thinking styles or personalities of the Board or committee members. Zonta District 5 does not endorse any of them but provided this one as an example of what is available. Using the internet to search for others may be helpful to presidents and committee chairs

Preparing the Participants
Having well-prepared membership, board or committee members makes for an effective and efficient meeting. Sending the agenda ahead of time along with supporting or informative documents will help to prepare the members. When it is a membership meeting having information ahead of time allows members who are unable to attend to have input which can be brought by others. During the board or committee orientation, Presidents and Committee Chairs can let their members know what is expected. A well prepared participant:
1. Comes with an open mind but does not hesitate to comment, criticize constructively or disagree.
2. Does not engage in distracting behavior. Prompt attendance, not side conversation, no shuffling of papers, no personal interruptions can all contribute to an orderly meeting.
3. Does not personalize differences of opinion, but rather tries to maintain an objective attitude.
4. Speaks up when one has something to say, but does not hog the floor. If comments are restricted to the meaty items, the discussion should be kept on target and fix the key points in the minds of others.
5. Listens actively to others, be tolerant of their points of view and help them develop their ideas.
6. Helps the president or chair stick to the agenda and controls wayward members by asking for clarification or by making constructive criticism or other appropriate remarks.
7. Takes notes for reference. Note-taking can help fix thoughts in one’s mind and can help in the after-stages of the meeting when it is time to implement decisions.

Listening Skills
Part of being a good leader is being a good listener. Members quickly learn if their leaders are willing to take the time to listen to their causes, concerns or complaints. Some listening skills to consider:
• Concentration (become attentive and fascinated with what is being said)
• Anticipate the path or direction the speaker is going and go with them there
• Mentally summarize what has been said
• Weigh the person’s evidence by MENTALLY questioning it
• Listen between the lines
• Look for the point the person is trying to make
• Paraphrase the statements made to question the clarity of the statement
• Question with open-ended questions, who, what, why, when, where, and how
• Accept full personal responsibility for your behavior and for the overall behavior of the board or committee
V. WORKING WITH GROUPS

Although most of the time President’s, Officers and Committees work with people in their Club, there are occasions when Zontians may partner with other groups. Here are some helpful tips.

- Don’t neglect the physical setting. Make sure the meeting is on neutral ground, that the room is quiet and without distractions, and the room is well ventilated and well-lit.
- Don’t let the committee or group get too large. As the size of the group increases beyond seven members, quiet members become more reticent. It also becomes increasingly difficult to get recognition for individual contributions.
- Pay attention to seating arrangements. Ideally, everyone should be able to see everyone else.
- Begin and end the meeting with an item that unites the group. This creates an atmosphere of good will. If the group does not reach a decision by meeting’s end, refer to past accomplishments.
- Plan the agenda carefully. Put items needing mental energy, bright ideas, and clear heads high on the agenda. Hold back on Items of great interest or concern to everyone until you’ve handled other business, as these items are apt to take up a great deal of time and the built-in interest will assure liveliness toward the end of the meeting.
- Handle clashes deftly. When a clash of ideas becomes a clash of personalities, turn to a neutral member to dilute the confrontation.
- Learn to control gabbers. A talkative person can be controlled by suggesting that she write a paper for a concerted study or by picking up a phrase that she used, repeating it and then calling on someone else to save the discussion.
- Ask the opinions of the most senior committee members last. This will foster discussion. If, their ideas are introduced too early, they may stifle discussion.
- Choose the strongest advocates of the solution when making any assignment. They will work hardest to prove it was the right decision.
- Get a verbal commitment from each assignee. This commitment made in front of the entire group leads to a greater degree of follow-through.
- Do not ignore the social dimension of a work group. Be sure to schedule a refreshment break.
- Volunteers need rewards, too. These can vary from intangible rewards (such as social rewards of belonging, prestige and esteem in increased visibility and responsibility in the Club or satisfaction of using new skills) to tangible rewards such as letters of commendation, plaques, dinners or other social affairs.

Dealing with unique personalities
The saying “it takes all kinds” is certainly true within Zonta! All Zontians are professional career women (and men) who lead highly successful lives. Zontians are all unique and bring exceptional and distinctive characteristics to Zonta! Here are a few unique personalities you may face in your leadership role and some suggestions for handling them:
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Behavior</th>
<th>Suggested Solutions</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Agreeable to everything</td>
<td>Ask if she may have some other ideas/suggestions to bring her into the discussion and more involved.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Arguer</td>
<td>Do not automatically dismiss or not listen to this member. Her objections may be legitimate—recognize and deal with the questions/issues/concerns she brings up with the entire group. If it appears this person is eventually arguing for the sake of arguing then talk to this person privately and ask her to participate on more positive tone for the good of Zonta.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clashing personalities</td>
<td>Ask a question directly on the topic being discussed. Bring in other member(s). Ask that comments be directed to the chair, not to other attendees to diffuse personal criticisms. Speak to the person after the meeting privately.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Definitely wrong</td>
<td>of course, this is subjective as to who may thing someone is “definitely wrong.” In any event, do not belittle the speaker. Just make a non-committal comment, move on and then speak to the person after the meeting privately.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Question you can’t answer</td>
<td>State you don’t have an answer and ask if anyone else may have some insight. If not, offer to get an answer from your many resources. Make sure you respond back once you do have an answer-preferably to the entire group but especially to the person who asked the question initially.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Obstinate</td>
<td>Maybe she doesn’t understand where you are going with the discussion. If this is the case, rephrase the issue and/or advise her that you will discuss the issue further with her after the meeting.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Has own issue to discuss</td>
<td>If it is pertinent to the subject being discussed, add the issue. If it isn’t pertinent, then advise it will be addressed/discussed later during the meeting according to the meeting agenda, if appropriate. Otherwise, advise that you will discuss the issue with her privately after the meeting.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rambler</td>
<td>When she stops for breath, thank her. Then rephrase one of her comments and move on.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Side Conversations</td>
<td>Ask everyone to focus on the subject under discussion. If that doesn’t work, pause and let others hear the side conversation. Try to draw the sidebar speakers into the main discussion.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
Talks too much: Summarize the discussion so far and direct a question to someone else. If the talker continues, say “Let’s hear what others think.” If the talker becomes difficult, recruit other participants by asking what they think about what the talker is saying.

Too quick and helpful: This member often has the right answer. However, she may prevent others from participating. Thank her and direct a question to someone else or suggest that other opinions be obtained from the group. Make sure she knows that you appreciate her help and ask her to summarize the discussion.

Unable to express ideas: Help out by rephrasing the idea in your own words: “Do you mean...?” Do not laugh, ridicule, or smirk as everyone becomes lost for words at some point during a meeting.

Wrong subject: Acknowledge her point and say you will discuss that particular subject at the appropriate time in the agenda. If not related to any agenda item, then advise her that you will discuss privately after the meeting.

How to Be a Good Follower
In the busy lives we lead, good leaders in one situation are good followers in many others. Here are the ten commandments of followership:

1. First and foremost, ensure the leader’s value system is compatible with yours. Major differences make the role of “follower” intolerable.
2. Articulate your view and position prior to any decision making. Every leader is entitled to know and understand the views of his or her followers in advance of the process. The leader is not well-served by “yes” men or women even though their position is compatible or close.
3. Close ranks once a decision is made. Defend the position as if you along made it.
4. Alert the leader as to progress toward the eventual goal.
5. Keep the leader fully informed; make sure there are no surprises.
6. Never take a public position without first informing the leader in private of your intention.
7. Act as a member of the team; suppress any desire for personal aggrandizement.
8. Never disparage fellow followers.
9. Fully convey the doubts and positions of colleagues to your leader.
10. Remember, loyalty is a two-way street. You are free to break ranks if the leader is disloyal to you.
VI. STRATEGIC PLANNING

Who should participate?
Since the Strategic Plan for the Club belongs to the membership, all members should be invited to the Strategic Planning Session. Not only does the Club expand the ideas and suggestions available but members active in the process are also your best supporters in approving the plan. The retreat can be planned at a time before the new officers begin their term or can be planned at the end of the previous term. The framework for the retreat should incorporate Zonta International goals and objectives and the goals of the district and club.

Planning a Retreat
Retreat planning can be done by Board officers and directors or a Retreat Planning Committee. The retreat planning committee should include the president or president-elect.

- If possible plan a day or several hours for the retreat
- Secure a facility where members are comfortable and relaxed
- Have an agenda for the day
- Use board members or committee chairs as moderators of group
- Be sure each group has a recorder
- Have the President or President-elect review the agenda and how the day has been planned.
- Topics for the day might include service projects, fundraising, membership recruitment/retention, club problems. Don’t try to do too much in one session.

Brainstorming
A brainstorming session is often helpful during the annual planning meeting in order to:

- Get a quick overview of what’s on Zontians’ minds
- Give fresh ideas to committees, the foundation, and the board
- Give members the opportunity to receive validation for their own interests/concerns within very controlled parameters

1. Begin by reviewing the basic RULES OF BRAINSTORMING:
   - Nurture a free flow of ideas, the more the better
   - Any and all ideas, no matter how far-out, are welcome
   - There is to be no judging of individual ideas—no negative OR positive comments
   - It is encouraged to “piggy-back” off of others’ ideas

2. Next, divide the membership into groups of 4 to 7 and hand each group a stack of blank cards.
3. Have each group assign one or more recorders to write every idea down—one thought per card.
4. Now explain that for the next 7 minutes groups are to mention everything that comes to mind about Zonta, including feelings, concerns, thoughts, ideas, while keeping in mind the rules of brainstorming—even a positive “that’s a good idea!” can crush or stifle the free-flow of thoughts!
5. Strictly adhere to the 7 minute time- allowing the discussions to go on much longer will lead to a gripe session.
6. Have each group divide the cards into piles: one for each committee, one for the board, and one for the foundation, if needed. For example: “the meetings are too long!” might go into the Board pile, while “I’d like more hands-on service projects.” might go into the Service committee pile.

7. At this point, you may want to allow a small sharing time in which groups report some of the ideas they came up with.

8. Now ask members to divide into their primary committees and distribute the piles of cards. If time allows, the committees can use the idea cards to flesh out their goals for the year and then plan how those goals will be met and measured. Or, it might be more appropriate for your club to have committees meet at another time to do this.

Evaluating Current Practices

It is easy for Clubs to get in a routine of doing the same thing every year. Strategic Planning provides a time to evaluate current projects and have suggestions for new ones. Some projects may be signature projects which provide publicity promoting Zonta in the community or provide a service that the community values and expects. These are ones you want to continue. Other projects may become stale or no longer needed. At this time, community needs can be reviewed and new projects sought. New projects stimulate energy, enthusiasm and bring new members to the Club.

The same thing goes for how each Club is run. Boards and Committees must be open to new ideas and suggestions. Doing everything as it has always been done can lead a club to extinction.

Setting Goals

Only five percent (5%) of people set goals. However, of those 5% who set goals, ninety-five percent (95%) achieve them. To be a viable goal, it must be written down, have an action plan, have a deadline for completion and meet measurable outcomes.

Here are eight steps to setting goals:

1. Identify the goal
2. List the club’s benefit from achieving the goal
3. Identify the major obstacles you must overcome to reach the goal
4. Determine what skills or knowledge are required to reach this goal
5. Identify the individuals you must work with to reach this goal
6. Develop a specific plan of action to achieve the goal
7. Decide on a realistic time limit for achievement
8. Identify measurable outcomes that will tell how well the goal was met.
VII. GROWING MEMBERSHIP

Recruiting     Retaining     Rejuvenate/Renew

Why does membership matter? Because vital, healthy members lead to vital healthy clubs and vital healthy clubs keep Zonta International strong and able to improve the status of women world-wide! Membership Growth must be purposeful and planned by your club. To do so, your club should make sure they have the following in place:

An Active Membership Committee – This committee is vital to the growth of membership in the club. The committee should meet on a regular basis (recommend at least 3 times per year and should be working with the club membership on recruitment and retention.

Membership Growth Strategy and Action Plan – Clubs grow membership by recruiting new members and retaining existing members through club rejuvenation. The club strategy/action plan should include all 3 R’s of membership growth, have clear goals/objectives and be time-based:

Recruitment:
• New member recruitment and retention goals. Be specific! For example, grow club membership by 12 members in the next biennium.
• Tools for club members – what is your club’s elevator speech? Are they energetic, enthusiastic and passionate when talking about Zonta?
• Do you have recruitment focused meetings?
• Are you inviting perspective members to join your club activities prior to considering membership?

Retention:
• New Member Orientation – this helps educate the new members on International and local aspects of Zonta.
• New Member Engagement in Club Activities – getting new members involved early will make them feel included and involved.
• Mentorship Program – This gives new members someone to go to for questions. The Mentor can also ensure that the club is involving and getting to know the new member so they feel welcome and appreciated. It also gives the new members someone to go to for questions on why Zonta does things certain ways, i.e., Robert’s Rules, International Service Projects, etc.

Rejuvenation:
• Does your club have projects that deliver on the mission of Zonta?
• Does your club foster fellowship?
• Are you listening to the voices of all your members and being open to new ideas?
• Are you managing conflict in a productive way?
• Are you doing sensing in the club on what members want/need?
• Do you do an annual planning retreat to involve your members in the club’s strategy planning?
• Are you helping to grow leaders in you club?
There are several tools out on the Zonta International website on membership, including brochures, forms, PowerPoint presentations, and the Zonta International Membership Manual. In addition, the club can tap into the District Membership Committee for help as needed. Also, is there a club in your District that seems to be growing membership? Connect with their President and Membership Chairman to see what they are doing and reapply!

Determining Zonta Foothills Priorities

At the January retreat, the club voiced a need to improve some of our efforts, such as the grant process and fundraising. Ten questions that may help you to determine if your Zonta Club is working for you
By Carmen C. Gomez, Zonta Club of Nassau

Zonta International is a worldwide service organization of executives working to improve the legal, political, economic, health and professional status of women through service and advocacy. It does this through the efforts of more than 28,000 women and men in over 1,200 clubs in 66 countries across the globe. The mission of Zonta at the club (local community) level, as well as the international level, depends on the commitment and active participation of every member.

If you think your Zonta Club is in trouble and could use some help in maintaining its commitment to the ideals of Zonta, then reflecting on these 10 questions and developing a plan for the way forward may be a good idea for you and for your club.

Does your president lead?
Zonta is a complex organization, which changes leadership every two years and yet expects great results from its membership. The President of a Zonta Club is the elected leader; she is expected to lead, and members expect to follow. Zontians are all business and professional people. As such, they are expected to be capable of leadership and were in fact invited into the fellowship of Zonta because they were perceived as successful or had the potential to be successful in business or the professions.

Does the Club do anything?
Ask yourself, “What does my club do?” Does the club have projects that support Zonta’s objects and its mission? Is the club in some way supporting the women of the community? What fundraisers does the club have and are they fun? If you can’t answer yes to each of these questions and give examples to support your answer, then the club needs to take a hard look at itself and its existence as a Zonta Club. Zonta is after all an organization dedicated to advancing the status of women through service and advocacy.

How do the Club’s Service Programs measure up to the mission of Zonta International?
Zonta International, through its Foundation, is one of the largest global charitable organizations around. ZI expects clubs to support its international service program through gifts of money and to mirror those programs through local projects in the club community. Do the club’s service projects relieve hunger, provide clean water, protect women and children from domestic violence, prevent trafficking humans, help to prevent the spread of HIV/AIDS, promote education among women and girls, empower women and girls? Although projects of ZI may change from biennium to biennium, if the club is not involved in meaningful and sustainable programs that have a positive impact on the community, then it is not being true to its mission. That could be a reason for the ennui displayed by the membership. Zontians need to be fulfilled.

How do you rate the club’s meeting programs?
Quality programs are essential to maintaining interest and zeal in club members. Does the club make the necessary effort to design and build quality programs that can sustain the excitement necessary to retain its membership? Are club meetings informative and interesting? Does the
How do you rate the Club's attendance record?
Meeting programs and attendance are closely related, as attendance is motivated by the quality of the meetings. If more and more members elect to miss meetings on a regular basis, it is time to evaluate the quality of the meetings. Are meeting programs worthy and timely? Do they relate to the mission of Zonta? Like everything else, the planning of club meetings requires thought and effort. Lackluster meetings will not attract attendance.

How much do members really know about Zonta?
An integral part of commitment is interest in and knowledge of the history, goals, and mission of the organization. When was Zonta founded? By whom? Why? What is the meaning of the name “Zonta”? How many members are there? What countries do they come from? The more the members of the club know about Zonta, the stronger, more positive, more responsive will be the membership.

Do the leaders and members of the club attend international events?
Area workshops, District Conferences, and International Conventions are ways to train leaders and members in the Zonta Family. When members attend these events they will be better prepared to lead when it is their turn to be the club president.

Are members of the club willing to accept leadership roles?
A sure sign of decay in any organization is the inability to inspire members to accept leadership roles. Members will hesitate to lead an organization that is not vibrant, effective or responsible to its mission. If members are not willing to serve, then it is important to take a hard look at the club in terms of its effectiveness in carrying out its mission and in satisfying the needs of its membership.

How are new members recruited and inducted?
Membership in Zonta is an honor and a privilege and is by invitation. Is the club recruiting members just to increase numbers? Are potential members aware of the ideals of Zonta? How are the leadership skills of potential members assessed? How is the commitment to service (in both time and money) of potential members assessed? How do you induct new members into the club? Is it just “Welcome, Jane, Here is your pin and dues are $250 per year?” Or is it an event that new members will not forget? Are new members given a thorough introduction to the ways in which the club operates? First impressions are lasting and set the tone for the future.

Why am I in Zonta?
Finally you need to ask yourself this question. When you do this, write down the reasons, and share them with fellow Zontians. Remember that as a member, you have obligations to the club and are an integral part of its success as an organization. If you neglect to give of your time and money, if you fail to participate in fundraising or service projects, if you do not attend meetings regularly, if you have never attended an area, district, or international meeting, if you refuse to accept leadership roles in the club and if you know little or nothing about Zonta then you need to examine your motives for joining and your commitment to your club. Achieving for Zonta is achieving for you.
